Copyright Statement

This copy of the thesis has been supplied on condition that anyone who consults it is understood to recognise that its copyright rests with its author and that no quotation from the thesis and no information derived from it may be published without the author’s prior consent.
GERMAN-GERMAN RELATIONS IN THE FIELDS OF SPORT, WITH PARTICULAR REFERENCE TO THE OLYMPIC GAMES 1952-1972

by

BERND WALTER RAEKE

A thesis submitted to Plymouth University in partial fulfilment for the degree of

DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY

School of Humanities and Performing Arts
Faculty of Arts

September 2014
Bernd Walter Raeke

German-German Relations in the Fields of Sport, with Particular Reference to the Olympic Games 1952-1972

Abstract

This thesis explores the surprising phenomenon of the existence of joint German-German teams in the three successive Olympic years of 1956, 1960 and 1964. This unusual example of cooperation – in the midst of Cold War hostilities - between the two antagonistic Germanys, West and East, was caused by:

- the idealistic though illusionary conviction of Avery Brundage, influential President of the International Olympic Committee (IOC), that German-German cooperation in the field of Olympics, as initiated by him, would also result in closer political relations between the Federal Republic (FRG) and the German Democratic Republic (GDR): ‘a development in which politicians have patently failed’, he remarked;
- the interest and hope of the GDR leadership that participation with the FRG in joint Olympic teams would open doors for international recognition of their country, a status the East struggled to achieve;
- the expectation by leaders of the West German sports movement that cooperation with the GDR in the Olympic field would result in improved relations: this despite reservations in official quarters that striving for better relations with East Germany ran the risk of alienating its Western allies;
- the concern of West German sports leaders that to spurn the Brundage initiative might leave the field free for Germany’s Olympic presence to become the sole domain of the GDR.

In spite of much behind the scenes squabbling, West-East cooperation gathered pace in the 1950s, only to end with the summer Games at Mexico City in 1968. The demise of the experiment was preceded by an IOC decision of 1965 to abandon its support for a joint German team and to grant full recognition to a separate team of the GDR, as well as to the Federal Republic. With their aim achieved, the GDR lost interest in further joint ventures and the 1972 Munich Games witnessed the participation of two antagonistic German teams.

The history of German-German Olympic cooperation remains a neglected theme in modern sports history. As well as exploring the origins, developments and unravelling of West-East cooperation – set within a changing diplomatic and sporting context – the thesis examines the return to more realistic, albeit cold, German-German relations. Avery Brundage’s dream was over, but it was remarkable that in the midst of the Cold War cooperation prevailed for over a decade.
List of Contents

Acknowledgements
v
Author’s Declaration
vi

Introduction
1

Chapter One
‘Risen from the ruins, looking to the future’, 1945-51
32

Chapter Two
Germany returns to the Olympic arena, 1952-55
58

Chapter Three
The German-German Olympic teams at Melbourne and Rome, 1955-60
86

Chapter Four
Continuing problems: the Berlin Wall and Tokyo, the team’s last Olympics, 1961-64
111

Chapter Five
Strained relations from the Olympics at Tokyo to the ending at Mexico City, 1964-68
141

Chapter Six
The aftermath: the run-up to and the Munich Games, 1969-72
175

Conclusion
197

Bibliography
206
Acknowledgements

First and foremost, I should like to thank my Director of Studies, Professor Kevin Jeffreys, for his encouragement, steady guidance, and extraordinary kindness throughout the research and writing of this thesis. I am grateful to my second supervisor, Dr Sandra Barkhof, for her interest and insightful comments.

Others have made me welcome and facilitated my research into primary sources, particularly on my five field visits to Germany. I should like to thank especially my German quasi-doktorvater, Lorenz Peiffer, Head of the Historical Sports Research Department, Hanover University, and Steffen Runki, Senior Librarian, Berlin German Federal Archives. I wish to thank staff at the German Historical Institute London, particularly former Director Hagen Schulze and Secretary Anita Bellamy.

I am indebted to staff at the following institutions: the German Federal Archives at Koblenz and Berlin, and the Archives of leading German newspapers Die Zeit, Hamburg, and Faz, Frankfurt.

I am grateful to my friends and neighbours Bill and Sue Andrew, and David and Sue Keeling, for their assistance and interest.

Finally, I would like to thank my wife Gizella for her loving, always positive critique, and her unwavering support. I dedicate this thesis to her.
AUTHOR’S DECLARATION

At no time during the registration for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy has the author been registered for any other University award without prior agreement of the Graduate Committee.

Work submitted for this research degree at Plymouth University has not formed part of any other degree either at Plymouth University or at another establishment.

Relevant seminars and conferences were regularly attended at which work was often presented; external institutions were visited for consultation purposes.

Word count of main body of thesis: 71,550

Signed........................................................

Date.....12 August 2014...............................